The implementation of curses included with INTERIX Release 2.2 and linked with several of the utilities (including tic , toe, infocmp, clear , tput , and tset) is a port of ncurses. Ncurses carries the following copyright notice:

ncurses is copyright (C) 1992-1995 Zeyd M. Ben-Halim and Eric S. Raymond

Permission is hereby granted to reproduce and distribute ncurses by any means and for any fee, whether alone or as part of a larger distribution, in source or in binary form, PROVIDED this notice is included with any such distribution, and is not removed from any of its header files. Mention of ncurses in any applications linked with it is highly appreciated.

The implementation of the KornShell included with INTERIX Release 2.2 is derived from pdksh. The code used in this implementation is in the public domain.

The implementation of tcsh is derived from source developed by the University of California, as mentioned above, and which also contains a single file (ma.setp.c) which is copyright © 1990 by Carnegie Mellon University , and which contains this notice:

Permission to use, copy, modify and distribute this software and its documentation is hereby granted, provided that both the copyright notice and this permission notice appear in all copies of the software, derivative works or modified versions, and any portions thereof, and that both notices appear in supporting documentation.

The implementation of cron included with INTERIX Release 2.2 is derived from Paul Vixie's cron program, which bears this copyright:
